An incident is an event that causes or could cause an accident, harm to health, environmental damage, damage to property or disruption on site. A near miss is also an incident, even if no one is hurt. The purpose of this procedure is to ensure quick help, correct reporting, preservation of necessary information and improvements that reduce the likelihood of it happening again. The procedure applies to all of P. Blöndal ehf.'s work.

First response

Stop dangerous work, make sure you are safe yourself and prevent further damage. If life or health is at risk, call 112 and follow the instructions of the emergency services. Do not put more people at risk with an unsafe rescue. Ensure access for emergency responders and protect the scene from machine traffic. If pipes or cables are damaged, also contact the owner and follow their instructions.

Reporting within the company

Everyone on site must inform the person in charge immediately of any serious hazard, accident, near miss or damage. The person in charge assesses whether the Administration of Occupational Safety and Health (Vinnueftirlitið), the police, the client, the insurer or others need to be notified as required. Serious incidents require immediate attention; do not wait until the end of the working day. Official reporting obligations and the instructions of the emergency services always take precedence over this procedure.

Investigation and cause

Information is gathered on the location, time, conditions, equipment, methods, division of tasks and witnesses, as appropriate. Photos are taken with respect for privacy and the circumstances. An investigation is not a hunt for someone to blame but a search for the cause, such as unclear instructions, wrong drawings, an inadequately separated work area or faulty equipment. The affected part of the work does not resume until safety has been reassessed.

Learning and closing the case

The person in charge decides on improvements, who carries them out and when. Lessons are shared with those who may face similar situations, without disclosing unnecessary personal information. Follow-up must confirm that improvements actually work, not just that they have been announced. If the procedure proves inadequate, it is updated and presented to staff.

Responsibility and review

The managing director is responsible for this document and for making sure its content is presented to everyone working on the company's behalf. It is reviewed when there are significant changes to the work, equipment or rules, after incidents, and otherwise regularly in line with the scale of the business.
